Cost: FREE

Instructors:

Overview: Course Description: In this 2-day course students begin developing a marketing plan for fire prevention using resources from the first two courses and those already in place in their communities. Upon completion of this course, students will be able to continue developing, refining, and applying a marketing plan that will outline target hazard risk, identify significant opponents, and present allies who may be available within their community.

Target Audience: Those who seek to learn new approaches to deal more easily with their community's fire and injury challenges, including departmental "leaders," both today's and tomorrow's, operational and administrative, in the Nation's smaller departments. Open to all interested emergency services personnel, including volunteer, career, and allied professions, the class is intended primarily for those who are serving or who have served previously in operations (suppression, EMS, etc.), and who seek to learn about more effective ways of combating the fire problem. Personnel with little or no prevention orientation will benefit significantly.

No prerequisites required; however, experience with marketing in the work environment, volunteer opportunities, or training/college courses is suitable and will enhance the training experience. Additionally, those who follow Ben May or use USFA's Marketing Manual or Public Information Education Relations (PIER) manual will find this course valuable.

Instructors:

Overview: Course Description: This 6-day course is designed to introduce command officers to the complexities involved in commanding incidents in high-risk areas. Students are confronted with a number of fire and rescue incidents that include high life hazard, multiple exposure, and unusual occupancy risk considerations. Students are introduced to advanced applications in the Incident Command System (ICS), command and control, decision making, strategic and tactical considerations, pre-incident preparation, documentation, and post-incident analysis. Several simulations and case studies are used to depict and review incidents in various types of target hazards. Some examples of these are penal institutions, bulk oil-storage facilities, nursing homes, colleges, chemical/agricultural manufacturing plants, and grain elevators. This course is comprehensive and uses lecture, case study, simulation, and student participation as instructional methods. This class is not a tactics class, but explains the development of Incident Management Teams.

Cost: $1,150 per student that includes tuition, morning refreshments,

Instructors: This course will be taught by several IACP Master Instructors, as well as Fire Department Chief (s).

Overview: Dates of Training The three (3)-week course will be presented by IACP Master Instructors in Medford, Oregon, during three sequential one (1)-week sessions December 5-9 2011, January 9-13 2012, and February 13-17 2012.

The LPSO leadership development training program is based on a behavioral science approach to leading people, groups, change and organizations. The original course material was developed and taught for many years at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. Through years of research and development, the curriculum was specifically tailored to meet the challenges and needs of the law enforcement community, and more recently the fire service.

In response to interest from the fire community and to encourage first responders within any given region to train together, the IACP partnered with fire organizations in Arizona to develop the LPSO course. The original course materials designed for law enforcement were modified to reflect both police and fire cultures.
